THE CHALLENGE

As one of a handful of highly-specialized digital marketing companies in Singapore, the Client recently expanded into the influencer marketing space.

The company unveiled their full-service influencer marketing package initially to the Hong Kong and Singapore markets. The Client was planning to follow this up with a full rollout in the rest of their APAC and North American segments in the next year.

The company wanted to accelerate the first phase of this expansion, so they decided to support their overall marketing efforts with targeted outbound tactics. The owner and CEO was convinced that outbound could be a "force multiplier" to inbound in terms of "scaling up direct touches."

But with much of their expertise and manpower committed to the company's core digital marketing business, the Client sought the help of third-party providers to handle the outbound campaign. The company looked at potential marketing partners that had:

1. Proven ability to reach their target businesses in their initial markets of Singapore and Hong Kong (and later in other APAC and North American locations)
2. Past experience handling campaigns in their priority industries
3. Demonstrated domain knowledge and expertise in the Client's offer

RESULTS WITHIN TWELVE WEEKS

THE CALLBOX SOLUTION

One of the Client's longtime digital marketing customers recommended Callbox as a possible outbound provider. After a thorough review of each potential vendor, the Client went with Callbox, mentioning how the latter "scored highly" in all the criteria they laid out.

A three-month appointment setting campaign was then planned and implemented. The campaign's main goal involved driving awareness and booking sales meetings for their recently-launched influencer marketing platform. Some key campaign activities include:

Building an Accurate, Targeted Marketing Database

- For the campaign, the Client wanted to target Singapore and Hong Kong companies from a range of consumer-facing industries, with 10 to 500 employees.
- The target contacts consisted of decision makers in charge of marketing, branding, and sales.
- The list was compiled using both Callbox's in-house database and additional desk research.

THE CALLBOX SOLUTION

Identifying Interested Leads and Scheduling Sales Appointments

1. The campaign team used phone, email, and LinkedIn touches in an integrated outreach cadence.
2. The messaging strategy was crafted to capture how the Client's new influencer marketing platform's key benefits solve the target customers' pain points.
3. Probing questions gauged each prospect's level of fit and interest. Prospects who wanted to know more about the platform were counted as completed leads, while those who agreed to meet with reps from the Client were tagged as qualified appointments.

Managing Prospects and Maximizing Conversions

1. The Client was provided with access to Pipeline CRM, Callbox's lead management and marketing automation tool, which helped them oversee the project and monitor progress in real-time.
2. The Campaign team leveraged various functions and features in Pipeline CRM to nurture prospects and maximize engagement.
3. Callbox handled all aspects of the campaign—from preparing campaign materials, to continuous testing and improvement.

RESULTS

The three-month campaign ran for a total of 66. The results met the Client's expectations in a number of key performance areas:

- 48 qualified appointments (which the Client considered near-term sales opportunities)
- 80 completed leads (which the Client will still transfer to their sales team but require more follow-ups)
- 116 requests for information (which represented significant marketing funnel growth)

Given these results from the initial campaign, the Client wants callbox to handle its upcoming outbound initiatives for the next stages of its expansion.
